The Question of the Hour.

Public interest in the war situation centres in the peace proposal of Spain, and the speculations as to the response that will be made by the President to the request to open negotiations. It is not at all likely that the terms of the reply will be given to the public until the matter takes some shape. The demands that will be made by this government, are, necessarily, not yet known, but the consensus of opinion seems to be that they will be such as Spain, which seems to realize her position at last, will in all probability accede to.

The embarrassing feature, and one which will call for wise statesmanship and careful judgment, will be the Philippine question. It is strongly intimated that it is not probable that the demand will look to the acquirement of the Philippines by this country. The President, it is said, is opposed to this.

Judging from statements in the Washington dispatches, the course of President McKinley will not be a radical one, but one which will amply repay the government for the expense of the war, accomplish its declared purpose to free Cuba and to drive Spanish rule from the West Indies, and to secure to the United States such advantages as will contribute to its future prosperity, and security from international complications.

The people may safely trust to the wisdom and the patriotism of the head of the Nation.

Women and the National University.

Elsewhere in to-day's Intelligence will be found an article giving briefly an outline of the national movement inaugurated by the women of the country for the establishment of a National University at Washington, for the higher education of American youth in the principles of politics and good government, as well as in the arts and sciences. This work is to be conducted by the George Washington Memorial Association, with chapters in all the states of the Union.

It was the grand purpose of General Washington himself, at the very foundation of the government, to establish such a university, and he left a bequest in his will for the purpose of starting the movement. Now, almost a century after the death of Washington, the matter, so long neglected, has been taken up by the progressive women of the country, and the article referred to above explains the plan. The membership fee in the association is not large, and the project appeals strongly to the patriotism of the women, and all others who will interest themselves in the establishment of this great memorial to the Father of his country.

A state committee for West Virginia has been appointed, the chairman of which is Miss Grace T. Davis, daughter of ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, whose home is at Elkins. Miss Davis will be glad, not only to receive contributions to the fund for the erection of an administration building on the proposed site in Washington, but will furnish any information regarding the Memorial Association and its plans that may be desired.

A great deal has been published concerning the National University plan, and the public is pretty thoroughly posted concerning its scope. Although Washington's favorite scheme, which he would doubtless have inaugurated himself had he been permitted to live longer, has been lying dormant all these years, it was not permitted to die, for the matter has been frequently agitated, but it has remained for the progressive, patriotic women of the country to thoroughly revive it, and to start a movement which may within a few years be crowned with success. It is intended that the corner stone of the administration building shall be laid on the centennial anniversary of the death of Washington, on December 14, 1898. This will be a fitting occasion for such a ceremony, and it will mark the beginning of the growth of a great institution of the future which will be one of the chief prizes of the Nation, and a monument to the splendid intellectual advancement of the first century of the history of the republic. It will be fitting, also, that an institution which will serve as such a monument for the future will have its beginning at the dawn of the twentieth century, which promises grander things for the world in general and our country in particular, along the lines of progress.

Sampson and Schley.

While the official report of Admiral Sampson of the destruction of the Spanish fleet is interesting in its details, and credits the entire American fleet with gallant action, and praises the conduct and the courage of the commanders and crews, the lack of more than a brief reference to the part Commodore Schley took in meeting the emergency in the absence of the commander of the fleet, cannot help exciting comment. When, in his first official notification of the victory, Admiral Sampson did not mention Commodore Schley, whose all other reports gave credit, it was thought that the formal official report from Sampson would make the special mention that all believed the commodore deserved. Instead of this, however, the admiral details much of his own personal movements and brings out the fact that his flagship signalled certain orders, which the vessels were already responding to, having received them from the Brooklyn.

Commodore Schley's official report will be regarded as a model in its modesty of expression, and the absence of any stress on his own conduct, while special mention by name is made of officers of less rank for their gallant conduct.

While no one would detract a particle from Admiral Sampson's reputation as a gallant commander and an officer deserving of the highest praise, the comment which has been excited by his failure to refer to Commodore Schley by name, either in his first telegram announcing the victory or in the commendation of his gallantry in the official report, is calculated to cause some disappointment among the public. To merely refer to "the commodore of the second division" (who acted as commander in his absence, and had the victory won practically before the flagship arrived on the scene) in a general way, without naming him, as "bearing well his part," along with the officers and men of all the ships, was hardly what the public expected, judging from the details of the official and all other reports. It may be that Admiral Sampson is simply lacking in appreciative sentiment, however, and, after all, we are sure, Schley will get the recognition his service has won for him.

The Railroad Men's Outing.

The railroad men and their families, who came from all surrounding and some distant points to honor Wheeling with their presence yesterday, found the hospitable gates of the city wide open. It was a day of music and of rest and recreation, as well as of speech-making and general social intercourse. We trust that the visitors, who are men engaged in a dangerous calling, and representative of the working forces on the great arteries of commerce, will take from Wheeling pleasant memories of a day well spent in the city and in the enjoyment of the beauties and diversions at Wheeling Park.

The railway employees of the country, from the men who hold the throttles and guard carefully the lives of their human loads, down to the humblest track hands, are types of American wage-workers who are brought more directly into relationship with the general public than any others, and it is on account of the responsibilities that devolve upon them, involving the safety of the lives of millions and of valuable property, that the public shares in their enjoyment on such occasions as that of yesterday.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Scott, having taken two or three days to visit home on private business, just as other men do, and then hasten back to Washington to resume his duties, which have been unusually arduous lately, in connection with the workings of the new revenue law, the Register finds in the incident a text for a statement from which it intends its readers to infer that he is neglecting his important official duties to attend to politics. When the Register takes a notion it doesn't stop short of anything to misrepresent a public officer who happens to be a Republican. The commissioner of internal revenue has been described by the Washington correspondents, regardless of party, as being one of the busiest men in Washington since the new law went into effect. But fairness isn't in our contemporary's line.

Col. John Jacob Astor was indignant that he should be detained at quarantine at Tampa until the transport he was on could be thoroughly fumigated and be passed by the health authorities, notwithstanding he was the bearer of important messages to the President. Dr. Glennan, the marine hospital surgeon, who declared that even the President himself, were he on board, would have to abide by the regulations, shows the sort of an officer he is. Colonel Astor just had to "grin and bear it."

No better evidence is wanted that the Democratic party is at a loss for a tangible issue for the coming campaign than the attempt on the part of the Democratic organs to raise the calamity wall at this juncture, to talk dead Bryan and free trade, and to seek to prejudice the public by unfounded allegations against the administration, as well as abuse of about every person connected with it. If the war ends soon, as is possible, these organs will find themselves in a quandary how to offset the effect of the failures of some predictions they are making. As to the dead silver issue and the free trade wall, the people have long since ceased to be frightened at those bugaboos.

Governor Atkinson is working hard to have the First West Virginia regiment included in the orders for the Puerto Rico campaign. He justly holds that it was one of the first regiments to respond to the first call for troops, and is thoroughly equipped and drilled, and that the members are anxious to go to the front. Senator Elkins has also interested himself, and is aiding the governor in his efforts in behalf of the ambition of the regiment. Doubtless when the matter is urged before the secretary of war to-day something may be done. West Virginia is proud of the regiment and wants it recognized on its excellent merits.

If Spain is playing for delay, which is not probable, though possible, the United States will not permit delay. If she really desires the war to cease, and wants peace, she must agree to the terms the United States decides upon. There will be no "dilly-dallying" about it. Spain has had a considerable time already to make up her mind on what basis she would like a settlement, and it will not take the United States long to arrive at a conclusion. There is no intention on President McKinley's part, in the meantime, of anticipating peace by a cessation of vigorous movements, for, after all, it may be necessary to prosecute the war with more vigor than ever.

The newspaper correspondent who prepared for the public a delightful love romance about Lieutenant Hobson, and announced his coming marriage to a beautiful Kansas girl, is rewarded for his brilliant display of inventive genius with a denial of the report by both Lieutenant Hobson and the mother of the young girl in question. According to Hobson, he is not even acquainted with the alleged prospective bride.

DEVIOUS DEFINITIONS.
Junction—A place where two roads separate.
Concise—Often the true term for exaggerated humbug.
Expert—A man who doesn't get confused when cross-examined.
Villager—People who wear abbreviated clothing in comic operas.
Miserly—People who don't spend their money as we think they should.
Clock—A treadmill on which Father Time toils twenty-four hours daily.
Nervous—The sensitive state of some people induced by the nerve of others.
Love—The thing that makes a girl think as much of a man as she does of herself.
Repartee—The bright things we always think of after the occasion for saying them is past.—Chicago Daily News.

A Patriot Philanthropist.
San Francisco Argonaut: Elias Howe, the inventor of the sewing machine, proved his patriotism during the war by enlisting and by frequent heavy contributions from his private purse. In November, 1862, his regiment was in Virginia, suffering great discomfort. Not having been paid off, and the men needing money, Private Howe advanced $12,000 due them. He sat at a table handing out the money, when a clergyman asked him for a subscription to ward a new church.
"Oh," said Howe, "this is war time."
"Yes," the clergyman replied, "but we need churches, and hope you will give us something for St. Peter's."
"St. Peter," said Howe, "he was the fighting apostle, and cut off a man's ear."
"Yes."
"Oh, well," said Howe, "I'll give you $50 for St. Peter, but just now most of my money is being spent on saltpetre."

TO KEEP COOL.
What not to eat and what not to wear are considerations which are more important to the woman who stays in the city all summer than the positive side of the question is to those who go to watering places for the season.
If you wish to keep cool do not eat ham or pork in any form.
Do not eat cornbread or cakes.
Do not eat "baked dinners."
Do not believe the popular delusion that hot drinks are cooling.
Do not wear tight neck dresses in the house. No matter how buoy your throat may be, the improvement in your temperature will be sufficient compensation to those about you for all its sparseness.
Do not eat much confectionery. All the sweets necessary to the system are supplied by the fruits, which should be the chief article of diet.
Do not wear high shoes at all.
Do not wear three or four skirts for modesty's sake. Comfort and health are much more important.
Do not wear a corset cover. With gingham shirt waists it is not necessary, and there should be no other reason than necessity for any garment on a hot day.
Do not wear a corset at all, if your figure will permit of its removal.
Do not wear tight sleeves. Fashion does not require them in summer dresses.
Do not wear gloves. Both comfort and economy will be the gainers thereby.
Do not wear a jacket on the street unless it actually conduces to your comfort. Every man goes without his coat over a negligee shirt in midsummer, and nobody criticizes him for doing it.

WASHINGTON MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION

And Its Object—West Virginia's Interest in the National University Scheme.

It is nearly a hundred years since the death of Washington. A marble shaft, taller than any other similar structure in the world, stands in the District of Columbia to commemorate his achievements. A greater tribute to his goodness and wisdom is now proposed by the fulfillment of his wish that there might be established at Washington a national university for the higher education of the youth of the country, not only in the arts and sciences, but in the principles of politics and good government. The reasons which appealed to him for the creation of such an institution are given in his will and he left a bequest to aid in its foundation. During his life time at his instance a site for the university was selected on the Potomac at Washington upon a knoll corresponding to the one upon which his monument now stands. No successful or sustained effort has been made to carry out this grand purpose of Washington, and the personal contribution which he intended to make has long since passed to other uses. He has left, however, a heritage most valuable, in the conception of this great work, and it has remained for the ladies of the country to come forward in an endeavor to carry it on.

A number of them, prominent in the social circles of the larger cities have organized the George Washington Memorial Association, with chapters in all the states of the Union, and are making a combined and systematic effort to bring into being the institution which Washington foretold. They aim first to secure sufficient funds to erect in Washington an administration building, which will bring the project directly to the attention of the national legislators and other visitors to the national capital. The Memorial Association has just held a convention of delegates from all over the United States. The meeting was enthusiastic and encouraging reports were presented. Several thousand dollars have already been subscribed, and interest in the movement is being widely manifested.

The association in raising funds depends largely upon the increase of its numbers, the membership fee being $5. All persons joining prior to November 1, 1893, will have the honor of being enrolled as charter members, and will receive a finely engraved certificate of subscription sufficiently attractive to compel its preservation. In years to come it will be valued as showing the interest and participation of the contributor in this great undertaking. Organizations, as well as individuals, are eligible for membership, and this applies most appropriately to the small social, benevolent and religious societies. The certificate of membership would make a suitable and commendable souvenir for the walls of their committee rooms.

By inheritance West Virginia shares the pride of Virginia in all that touches the greatness of Washington, and her sister states will look to her for a proper expression of her interest in the undertaking. The hundredth anniversary of the death of Washington occurs on the 14th of December, 1899, and the Association intends that upon this most fitting occasion there shall be laid the corner stone of the great university, the foundation of which he sought to provide.

The chairman of the West Virginia state committee is Miss Grace T. Davis, daughter of ex-Senator Davis, whose home is at Elkins, W. Va., and who will be glad to receive and acknowledge contributions in any amount for the fund, as well as applications for membership and to furnish any information that may be desired on the subject.
